3.	Objectives of strategy policy	This policy sets out Public Health Wales' commitment to creating a more flexible workplace to enable the recruitment and retention of staff and to facilitate a healthy work-life balance that is essential to health and

		wellbeing of our workforce. This policy also sets out the process of how to apply for a flexible working request, as well as outlining the manager's role in reviewing and processing a flexible working request fairly and timely.
4.	Evidence and background information considered. For example <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • population data • staff and service users data, as applicable • needs assessment • engagement and involvement findings • research • good practice guidelines • participant knowledge • list of stakeholders and how stakeholders have engaged in the development stages • comments from those involved in the designing and development stages Population pyramids are available from Public Health Wales Observatory and the 'Shaping Our Future Wellbeing' Strategy provides an overview of health need.	Policy Workshop Policy development workshop held, including managers, staff and TU representatives within the organization on 27th February 2018. Comments from workshop incorporated into policy, with further revisions following circulation of draft. Research Research undertaken on subject area and impact on protected Characteristics. CIPD Employee Views on Working Life (April 2016) The use of flexible working has a big impact on employee's attitudes to work-life balance, with 65% of flexible workers satisfied or very satisfied with their work-life balance compared with 47% of employees who don't work flexibly. Flexible workers are much less likely to report being under excessive pressure than people who don't work flexibly, with 29% of flexible workers saying they are under excessive pressure every day or once or twice a week compared with 42% of people who don't work flexibly. In all, 54% of employees nationally use at least one form of flexible working. Part-time working is by some way the most commonly used form of flexible working, with early three in ten employees reporting

they work in this way (29%). The next most commonly used forms of flexible working are flexi-time (19%), working from home on a regular basis (14%) and mobile working (7%). Options such as term time working (1%), job share (1%) and compressed hours (3%) are very rarely used.

There is a big difference between the flexible working options that are most commonly used by women compared to men. In all, 44% of women work part-time compared to 13% of men. Men (17%) are more likely to work from home than women (10%). Overall 63% of women employees use one or more forms of flexible working compared to just 44% of men.

The top three most frequently cited benefits are that it helps employees reduce the amount of stress/pressure they feel under (29%), it enables better work-life balance (54%) and it has been a factor in them staying with their current employer (28%). A quarter of respondents say being able to work flexibly enables them to be more productive at work and to pursue hobbies/personal interests outside work.

Just over a fifth of respondents say that flexible working helps them to reduce the amount of time they spend commuting (23%), manage caring responsibilities for children (22%) and invest more time in friends and family (22%).

In total, 33% of respondents report that flexible working helps them manage caring responsibilities of some description, either for children, parents or grandparents, spouse or partner, or others outside of the family.

Flexible Working: A Talent Imperative, Timewise, 19th September 2017

https://timewise.co.uk/wp-content/uploads/2017/09/Flexible_working_Talent -Imperative.pdf

87% of all full-time employees either work flexibly already, or say they want to.

The preference for flexible working is strong for both sexes: 84% of male full-time employees either work flexibly already, or say they want to. For women this rises to 91%.

93% of non-workers who want a job would prefer to work either part-time, or flexibly in a full-time role.

Young workers want flexible working most: 92% either work flexibly or say they want to.

Reasons

Amongst full-time employees who work flexibly, the most popular two reasons are generic – work/life balance (cited by 57% of the sample) and general convenience (50%). Many people additionally or alternatively cite a more personal reason, three of which have similar importance – commuting issues (33%), leisure or study commitments (32%), and caring responsibilities (29%). Fitting with other work commitments is also an issue for some (20%), while 14% cited health or disability.

Differences by Age Group

Some reasons to work flexibly differ significantly by age group:

- 18-34 year olds are more likely than other age groups to cite leisure/study (37% vs. 27% amongst 35-54 year olds) or childcare (33% vs. 17% 55+).

- 35-54 year olds are more likely than other age groups to cite commuting time (37% vs 28% 55+)
- Those aged 55+ are much more likely than younger people to select the generic reasons of work/life balance (66% vs. 54% 18-34) and general convenience 66% vs. 54% 18-34).
